

James Mullen

James brings more than 7 years of management experience in healthcare informatics to his role as Manager, Strategy and Planning at the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health (CAMH). He was recently involved in the successful hospital-wide implementation of the new Clinical Information System (CIS) at CAMH. In his current role, James is responsible for developing the next phase of the IM/IT Strategy. He oversees all procurements, communications, finances, and special projects within the Information Management Group portfolio. James is currently an instructor of two courses within McMaster University's Health Informatics program and an instructor for one graduate-level course for the Masters of Health Informatics program at the University of Toronto. James has a Masters of Health Informatics from the University of Toronto.